What follows may be relied on as absolutely authentic; indeed, if I mistake not, Colonel (then Captain) Wyatt M. Efliott and Captain Bossieux, of the Richmond Grays, took part in the episode. In the spring of 1861 there were stationed were formed into the Twelfth regiment by Governor Letcher, and D. A. Weisiger, of Colonel T. J. Jackson to this command, and directing him to report to Norfolk for duty. of the laws of any State. This news, being communicated by the coloral gentlemen who had recently graduated at the Virginia Military Institute, and who means flattering, estimate of Jackson's character and abilities. Their unfavorable report of him, backed by instances of his eccentricities and ascetic disposition, confirmed and Inflamed the objection first made to a stranger, and the end of the matter was a letter to Governor Letcher protesting against the assignment and asking for its revocation. After some hesitation the Governor complied, and giving Jackson another field of duty launched him forth on that path of fame now so well known of all men.

The Twelfth regiment remained at Norfolk during '61, and was still inactive in the following spring, when their rejected lieuin the Valley which has no parallel in American warfare for its brilliance and force. In the summer campaign the regiment took efficient part; and at Crampton's gap Fielding Taylor, the gallant and accomplished officer who came to us in place of the rejected lieutenant-colonel, was killed; but ere then Jackson had become famous, had been promoted to command of balf the army, bad come to be known as Lee's right arm, and was filling a giant's place in the minds of friend and foe. And often then and afterwards, on the march and around the campfire, was there talk of the invincible leader, and a smile that we had once rejected him, and a growing wonder as to bow different might have been his history-perhaps, how varied our experience-but for the independent spirit of a volunteer organization and the contagious prejudices of a few of W. E. C. Jackson's old scholars.

At the close of the proceedings Mr. RAN-DALL, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Cox. of New York, resigned as members of the Committee on Rules.

There was great excitement upon the Speaker remarking, in response to a point of order made in a speech by Mr. S. S. Cox. that be (Cox) was familiar enough with the rules to know that his speech was made for for years, and he never knew such an in- lia. fringement as that now contemplated. He offered his resignation as a member of that committee.

At this point the Speaker made the offensive remark.

Mr. RANDALL had previously tendered his resignation as a member of the committee. Mr. Cox said the SPEAKER had no right to question his motives, or to say he made a speech for dramatic effect.

Mr. LAMAR asked whether the Chair had the right to question the motives of any member.

The SPEAKER said "No; but it had been he might therefore be excused for speaking present.

The excitement already pervading the Democratic side of the House was intensified by the Speaker's use of the words "dramatic effect," and a dozen members were on their feet to know what right the Speaker had to construe any man's motive. A Radical on the floor, who does not seem to be known, added fuel to the fire by remarking sotto roce when Cox attempted to speak, "Ob, you dry up." This roused Mr. Eldredge, who quickly retorted that no man's motive could be construed by the Speaker, and that a gentleman on taking the floor should not be subject to ridicule and speers. The indignation of the Democrats was earnest and real, and Mr. Randall gave the Speaker to understand that he was fully hispeer in all respects, and would suffer no attack upon himself from the Chair.

Finally, Blaine said, alluding to his cha-. racterization of Cox's remarks, that he might have spoken with too much warmth; and thus oil was poured upon the troubled sured. The Few Remaining Weeks of the session will be crowded with business and to have anything like legislation of a satisfactory character night sessions must be commenced next week; and even then it is very doubtful if one-half of the bills requiring action can be disposed of.

The Louisiana debate has already consumed weeks; but if the effort is made to seat Pinchback-and it seems probable such effort will be made-the whole discussion in that State. Referred to the Committee on will be gone over again, and then the debate will be of a far more exciting character than heretofore.

The River and Harbor Appropriation Bill

Many of these items will be opposed, and another exciting discussion will be the result, though of course they will be TIMON. Unsuccessful Attempt at a Sly Caucus.
